Agro Innova Co.'s Puree

is brought to you by a family that started producing cacao in the eighteenth century in South America, in the northwestern region of the continent then known as New Granada, which later became Greater Colombia, and today is comprised of several countries. Cacao for centuries has been a source of the main ingredients of chocolate, but it is little known that it is also the source of a delicious juice that is sweet and has none of the bitterness of chocolate. Farmhands always have enjoyed the

cacao juice straight from the freshly-picked fruit, yet it took twenty-first century technology to make it possible to extract the juice efficiently to bring it to consumers throughout the world, with all its goodness and healthy qualities intact.

It takes dozens of cacao pods as big as pineapples to produce a single quart of pure cacao juice. So it is a very precious liquid indeed, which contains the very rich antioxidants and healthy properties that make chocolate so popular around the planet.

Cacao Puree

is an ingredient naturally rich in antioxidants, principally polyphenols, flavonoids, and vitamin C. It is processed from the sweet white pulp of the cacao fruit, rather than from the bitter dark seeds where chocolate comes from. Cacao puree blends well with other products and is a balanced source of theobromine, the natural ingredient that provides the familiar good sensation in chocolate.

In June 2010, after decades of hands-on experience growing cacao on professionally managed plantations, Joseph Montgomery, descendant of a family that was one of the world's largest growers of cocoa in the 19th and 20th centuries, incorporated Agro Innova Co. (owner of the Suavva brand) to take full advantage of the by-product of cacao only now commercially available thanks to a new efficient way to industrialize cacao puree that he and his team at Agro Innova Co. created. Agro Innova Co. is Certified as a Minority business in accordance with The National Minority Supplier Development Council.
